What do you think is scary ? A Halloween spook house ? A haunted corn maze ? A slasher movie ? Certainly these kinds of things can give you a shiver, but - really - don't we all know they are just make-believe, acknowledged fictions ? In real life, what is more likely to be really scary are things like finding your keys locked in the car, or discovering termites in the foundation of your home, or hearing the telephone ringing in the middle of the night.

Urban legends (ULs) are scary when they combine horror fiction with the details of real life. In typical ULs you encounter shocks such as lurking criminals, threatening maniacs, vague unknown dangers, faulty products and isolated victims, all set in the context of everyday life. Such stories are told by a friend as something that happened to his or her close acquaintance (a friend of a friend, or a FOAF). Urban legends are packed with local details and related with an air of conviction. While these stories are not literally true, any more than a horror film is, when hearing them we realize that they could be true!

Read the following passage and answer the questions :

The differences between 'video production' and 'television production' have become increasingly blurred. Most video production is concerned with non-broadcast programme making. Video productions are generally distributed via DVDs or online. Although video productions are generally made with a lower budget, it does not mean that few people see them. A simple tour of YouTube will show that millions of people are looking at video productions every day.

Television productions, on the other hand, are usually shown to a large public audience by broadcast or cable transmission, either 'live' or 'recorded'. Television transmissions are required to conform to closely controlled technical standards. However, television productions may be considered to be a type of video production once they are distributed in a non broadcast method (DVD, Internet, etc.). With the high quality of today's consumer and prosumer equipment, video productions can be made with equipments ranging from that meeting the most sophisticated professional broadcast standards to low-cost consumer items.
